enough. The side of a steel ship is made up of many separate plates fastened together with rivets. If you will look at the picture showing the two parts of the ship separated, you will notice that the cut is zig-zag like bricks in a wall, and that it is not made by cutting the ship across as with a saw, but by cutting out the rivets which connect the different plates. The new and the old parts are thus woven together and the completed structure is in all respects the same as though it had been originally planned according to the increased length, the joints between the new and the old differing in no way from the hundreds of other joints in the vessel's hull.

The actual hauling apart of the ship was successfully accomplished on Saturday, February 3. Only seventeen minutes was required to move the forward end of the ship the desired forty-six feet, although its weight was some eight hundred tons. This part of the vessel rested in a cradle of heavy timbers which slid upon greased tracks or ways, the same as are used to launch a ship, except that powerful winches were used to haul the mass along instead of sliding it down an incline as in launching.

LENGTHENING THE STEAMSHIP HAMILTON.

Extension Amidships that Will Add Forty-six Feet in Length, and Increase Both Her Passenger and Freight Capacity.

Those of our readers who have made a voyage on the Hamilton will doubtless be interested in the photographs of this vessel which appear in this issue. The pictures show the ship at the yard of the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co., where she is now being lengthened to increase her passenger accommodations and also her capacity for carrying cargo.

This is by no means a novel feat, as many of the coastwise ships of to-day, and in fact several of the vessels of our navy, have been similarly lengthened.

What appeals to one most is the size of the operation and the large scale upon which it must be carried out. Fancy separating a steamship in the middle and putting in a new piece just as one might put an extra leaf in his dining table!

How do they join the new piece to the old so it will be as strong as before? Easily

After Being Hauled Apart.

White Pine Lumber

"White pine lumber is to-day selling for five times more than it did in 1865, and unless the timber men plant trees, as the Government advises, there will soon be no lumber of that kind at all," said David E. Wilcox, who came into the city from a tour of the South and registered at the Seventh Avenue last night. Mr. Wilcox's headquarters are at Detroit. He continued: "In 1865 white pine lumber was sold at from $1.25 to $5 a thousand feet; in 1906 it is selling at from $15 to $25 a thousand feet, according to the grade. And at that price it is mighty hard to get. In regard to hemlock lumber, the situation is almost the same as regards the supply that can be had to-day. There is a good lot of this timber in the country, much of it in Pennsylvania, West Virginia and the South. But it is being bought up rapidly for speculation by men who can afford to have their money tied up for several years. They are simply waiting for their price, and they are going to come out handsomely on the deal, too."—Pittsburg Gazette.

Stripping the Hamilton Before Beginning the Lengthening Operations.

When the Hamilton leaves the shipyard this spring to resume her place in the line, she will have been repainted and redecorated throughout equal to a new ship. It is believed that she will be even more popular than before.

Peanuts and Soulful Eyes

The editor of this paper begs to acknowledge receipt of the first bribe of his editorial career. Some days ago we made inquiries of one of our society young ladies concerning a news item and elicited the following reply: "Yes, it is true, but ple-e-e-ease don't print it in the paper. If you leave it out I'll give you a nickel's worth of peanuts."

We are not passionately fond of peanuts, but gallantry is our long suit. That "please" would have separated us from our overdraft at the bank without a single regret. So we omitted to print the story. It wasn't anything very startling, anyway.

This morning a Senegambian gentleman, preceded by about six inches of pleasant smile, wafted into the editorial sanctum with a package under his arm about the size of a week's washing.

Peanuts! The whole family will be kept busy for a week eating up the outward and visible manifestations of our venality. We begin to appreciate the joys of being a boodler.—South McAlester (I. T.) News.

THE MAIN LINE SERVICE

Of the Old Dominion Steamship Company Between New York and Norfolk, Va.

The Old Dominion Steamship Company occupies a foremost position among American coastwise lines. It is one of the oldest of them; its vessels are the largest and finest plying along the Atlantic seaboard, and it operates the longest daily all-water route in the world. Any one of these features would entitle it to distinction, but when the three are combined it is no empty boast to claim pre-eminence for the company, its steamships and its service.

From small beginnings the Old Dominion Steamship Company has advanced to its present important position among coastwise lines. A recent issue of the Marine Review, in an article on American steamship companies, says of this line: "The Old Dominion Steamship Company, which conducts a general passenger and freight service from New York to Norfolk, Portsmouth, Richmond, Va., and James River points, is characteristically American. From very modest beginnings, indeed, it now operates a great number of splendid steamers. The company has favored the Marine Review with a photograph of the old steam brig New York, which was built at the foot of New Castle street, Norfolk, in 1821, by William F. Hunter. She was of 281 tons burden, and 50 horse power. It is curious to note how very closely the New York followed the Savannah, built in 1820, and then the wonder of the world. The Old Dominion Steamship Company is an outgrowth of the Virginia Steamship Company, which had quite a prosperous business before the Civil War."

To-day the Old Dominion Steamship Company has a fine fleet of staunch, ocean-going steamships, every one of which is as large as transatlantic liners were hardly a dozen years ago. These vessels, while they have great cargo capacity, are still notably roomy and comfortable in their passenger accommodations and are equipped with every convenience that sea-going travelers can require. Saloons are handsome and luxurious, finished in hard woods and furnished with leather or fabric covered couches and easy chairs. Ample room is provided on the promenade deck for those who like to be outdoors at sea; there are special ladies' cabins, and there are commodious smoking rooms on the boat deck.

The staterooms are large and well ventilated, heated by steam and lighted by electricity, having also electric push buttons connecting with the steward's department. The dining saloons are attractively arranged and furnished, and the cuisine is unsurpassed. The elegance and taste displayed in the arrangement, finish and decoration of the interior of the passenger accommodations of these vessels give an air of homelikeness and comfort that is particularly agreeable to travelers by this line.

It has been the policy of the Old Dominion Steamship Company to dispose of its earlier vessels as rapidly as they become inadequate to the service, or are superseded by more modern types, replacing them with the latest creations of the ship-builder's art. In this way the Old Dominion fleet is constantly kept up to date in every respect. There are no old vessels on this line, there are no antiquated arrangements nor obsolete conveniences. Everything is new, modern, complete, and of the latest and most approved type.

The present Main Line fleet of the Old Dominion Steamship Company consists of the Monroe, Jefferson, Hamilton, Princess Anne and Jamestown, all steel screw steamships more than 300 feet in length. Their names are taken from distinguished American personages or places, and in the regularity and steadiness of their service they more than typify the sturdy integrity of the patriots or the historic localities whose names they bear.

The SS. Monroe was named after James Monroe, of Virginia, a statesman, diplomat and fifth President of the United States; a man whose political life opened at the early age of twenty-three, when he was elected to the Virginia legislature, and who afterwards was honored with the highest offices that both State and Nation could bestow.

The SS. Jefferson was named after Thomas Jefferson, of Virginia, statesman, diplomat, drafter of the Declaration of Independence, and third President of the United States. During his career Thomas Jefferson was prominent in all the important events of the country. The great Louisiana Purchase was consummated while he was President.

The SS. Hamilton was named after Alexander Hamilton, of New York, soldier, patriot and statesman. He became a resident of America in 1772, and later served his adopted country in various important ways. His early literary works, his political writings and his soldierly career have received greater publicity than those of any other American except Washington himself.

The SS. Princess Anne was named after Princess Anne county, Virginia, upon whose soil the early English settlers first landed in 1607. The point of debarkation was at Cape Henry, but the hostile Indians and the bleak and sandy shores proved so unsatisfactory for a permanent settlement, that another was selected on the James river.

The SS. Jamestown was named after Jamestown on the James river, Virginia, where the first settlement of English speaking people was established in the Western Hemisphere. Jamestown is the spot where national interest will center forever, for it is the most ancient landmark in this country of enlightened civilization. The history of Jamestown is the history of the Virginia colony and the whole country for many years.

"Why don't you go to work?" said a charitable lady to a tramp, before whom she placed a nicely cooked meal.

"I would," replied the vagrant, "if I had the tools."

"What sort of tools do you want?" asked the hostess.

"A knife and fork," said the tramp.—Tatler.

Norfolk Protestant Hospital

A notable addition to the public institutions of Norfolk is the recently completed Protestant Hospital at Ghent, one of the new and rapidly growing suburbs of the city. The site has been well chosen. The surroundings are healthful and, what is often of equal value to the sick, cheerful in outlook. The hospital grounds cover an entire city block and upon this the buildings are so placed as to afford the maximum of light and air, with all the added facilities that are required for "outdoor" patients. As the picture shows, the main building and one wing only have been constructed. The other wing remains to be built. The mechanical plant of the institution is located in the rear of the main building.

This hospital has already proved its worth and usefulness to the people of Norfolk and vicinity, and its capacity has at times been fully taxed. It is well conducted and had an efficient corps of surgeons, nurses and attendants. Its healthful location, its accessibility (eight minutes by trolley from the center of Norfolk) and its surroundings enable it to combine the advantages of a hospital and a sanitarium, thus making it equally valuable to the seriously ill or injured, and the invalid or the convalescent. The views from its windows are pleasing, showing green fields, woods, open cultivated country and attractive suburban homes, together with portions of Norfolk's busy harbor, with its ever-changing panorama of steamers and sailing vessels. The mildness of the Virginia climate adds another feature of value to this hospital's resources.

A colonel in General Pickett's division sometimes took more applejack than was good for him. Passing him one evening, leaning against a tree, smoking his pipe, the General said:

"Good-evening, Colonel. Come over to my tent for a moment, please."

"S-s-cuse me, G-g-gen'ral, 's-scuse me," replied the Colonel. "But's all I can do to stay where I am."

THE SHIP CARVER NO MORE

His Occupation Gone Through a More Severe and Plain Form of Stem Finish

Twenty-five years ago the ship carver's trade flourished in all the ports of this country, but to-day his occupation is gone, for the chief product of his art, the figurehead, has almost disappeared from the merchant marine. The profits of sea freighting are counted in larger figures now, but the present age is altogether practical, and utility has driven romance from the blue water.

Men of middle age can recall the day when nearly every vessel was ornamented with some sort of figurehead, but now one might search for days along the docks without seeing anything of the kind.

The figureheads of the old fleet afforded an interesting study. Some were illustrative of the vessel's name, others whims of the owners or the captains, and others symbolic of events occurring at the time the vessels were built.

The schooner War Eagle, for instance, was built in war time, and she had for her figurehead a fierce looking eagle, perched upon a heap of cannon balls and with arrows clasped in his claws.

The schooner American Eagle was decorated with a gorgeous bird of freedom, and the brig American Union was liberally ornamented, stern and bow, with the symbols of this nation. The old sailing ship Expounder had a figure of John Marshall, holding in his hands the Constitution outspread, and the steamer Daniel Webster carried on either paddlebox a medallion head of the great orator.

The Italians are famous for the decoration of their vessels, bow and stern, and the intricacies of the designs are no less wonderful than the combination of colors displayed, white, blue, yellow and green being the favorites. In the matter of symbols, everything from a rosebud to a seven-story castle is shown, and the more they can crowd into a given space the better pleased are the men of Italy.

The vessels of the United States navy are ornamented, as a rule, with the national coat of arms, while some ships, like the Massachusetts and Olympia, carry elaborate designs—the former a figure of victory presented by the State of Massachusetts and placed on the forward turret of the vessel, and the latter an elaborate decoration of her bows symbolizing the deeds of the cruiser and her crew.

The modern merchantman, however, generally has a straight, sharp stem running off into a fiddle neck under the bowsprit, but oftener severely plain.—N. Y. Sun.

A Richmond War-Time Story

Not all the war-time stories have been told. The writer was recently in Richmond, Va., where he met a prominent Confederate veteran and where he heard at first hand the following. The narrator is a well-known Richmond business man, active and vigorous in spite of his nearing three-score and ten, and who graphically described one of his own experiences during the Civil War.

The conversation that led up to the narrative was about the accuracy of fire on board the new war vessels of the United States navy at target practice, and he claimed that that was nothing unusual, that American gunners had always been remarkably accurate. "I will tell you of one of my experiences during the defense of Richmond to prove it," said he.

"During Grant's campaign, when he was investing Richmond, and General Robert E. Lee was resisting the advance of the Federal troops, I was headquarters courier on the staff of a colonel whose regiment was posted on the heights just east of Richmond. The day on which this incident took place was hot, exceedingly hot, and there was little or no fighting. An occasional shot or two, but that was all. Even the artillery seemed to feel the effects of the heat and on both sides had ceased firing. At this stage General Lee rode up to our headquarters, on a round of inspection, and was saluted by our colonel, who commented on the state of the weather. General Lee agreed that the heat was excessive and in the course of the conversation that followed, said: 'Colonel, how I would like a good drink of water from Holly Spring.' The colonel turned to me, and, calling me by name, said: 'Ride over to Holly Spring and get a pitcher of water for the General.' I took a pitcher, fastened a bridle strap to it so that I could use it for a bail, and started. There were two roads to Holly Spring, one around the foot of Libby Hill and the other over the top of it. I took the latter as being much the shorter. There was a Federal gunboat lying about a mile and a half down the James river, and I was in plain sight from her as I passed over the hill. I filled the pitcher at the spring, remounted and galloped back. Just before I reached the crown of the hill I saw a puff of white smoke from the side of the gunboat, and an instant later a conical shot that we used to call a 'lamppost' struck just short of the road, plunged directly under myself and horse, threw us both down and covered us with dirt. Fortunately no other damage was done. The water was lost but the pitcher remained unbroken. I rode back for more water and again galloped over the hill. This time, however, I stopped my horse suddenly about a dozen feet from where the first shell struck and rode back about ten yards or so. Just as I wheeled another 'lamppost' whizzed right over the roadway exactly in line with the first shot and just high enough to have toppled me out of the saddle if I had continued straight ahead. I didn't wait to see if the Yankees were going to fire again, but put spurs to my horse and soon reached headquarters with the pitcher of water. It took pretty good marksmanship to come as close as that to a galloping horse at a distance of a mile and a half, and when you consider the improvements that have been made in heavy guns since the Civil War, they're not shooting so much better, after all."

A true republic should be like a custard pie—without any upper crust.

One-half of man's energy is wasted. Only the down strokes count in chopping wood.

WITH THE WITS

Timidity

"Why do you avoid the man to whom I introduce you? He is very agreeable and interesting."

"I avoid meeting agreeable and interesting people," answered the misanthrope. "That was how I came to get my life insured in a bad company."—Washington Star.

Allaying His Fears

Mrs. Goode (a clergyman's wife)—My husband always says a short prayer before each meal.

The New Cook (indignantly)—Well, he needn't take such precautions phwhile I'm at th' range—I'm no cookin' school gradooate!—Puck.

Sizing Them Up

"But, doctor," asked the young practitioner, "why do you always order champagne for every new patient that comes to you?" "Because, my boy," replied the wise old medical man, "I can judge by what he says whether or not he can afford it. That helps when I come to make out my bill."—Philadelphia Press.

Perspicuity and Perspicacity

Professor Barrett Wendell, of Harvard, tells this anecdote of an English lecturer. There was a certain instructor who was always impressing upon his students the need of perspicuity. A young man came to him one day to get back an essay that had been submitted. "A very good essay," said the instructor as he returned the paper, "but, Mr. Smith, you should write always so that the most ignorant person can understand every word you say." The young man looked up anxiously. "What part of my essay was not clear to you, professor?" he asked.

A Fair Retort

It was at an election meeting, and an excited voter shouted to the candidate, "Don't beat about the bush; answer my question 'Yes' or 'No.'" The candidate replied: "But, my dear sir, there are some questions which cannot be answered 'Yes' or 'No.'" The elector replied rudely with the single exclamation "Bosh!" The candidate continued, "Very well, I will prove what I say. Now, sir, the question I will put you is this: 'Have you left off beating your wife?'" And the meeting shouted to the inquisitive elector, "Answer him 'Yes' or 'No!'"—London News.

Getting Back at the Judge

"General Turner, of Tennessee, was trying a case before Judge Springer in the Indian Territory courts," said one of the lawyers, "when he quoted a great deal from the Bible and very little from the law. He was addressing the jury, and finally Judge Springer said: 'General, you will have to show where those quotations are from. I do not remember reading them in any of the law books.' 'I am quoting from the Bible, Judge, and I am addressing the jury, every member of which knows about the Good Book. If I had been addressing the court I would have brought the book with me.'"—Topeka State Journal.

Tommy Was Right

Teacher—"Tommy, what is the name of the largest known diamond?" Tommy—"The ace."—Cleveland Leader.

Butler and the Judge

The last time General Butler was in Washington he was closeted with Senator Eaton. He held some papers in his hand in such a way that an underscored marginal note, "Insult the Judge," caught Eaton's eye, and he asked what it meant.

"It's a case before Judge Shaw," Butler replied. "If I can only rouse his indignation, he is so just—painfully just—that he will give me the case for fear he is being biased against me by his personal feelings."

Hamilton's Offense

An instance of a child's proneness to take things literally was furnished by a little schoolgirl who lives in Brooklyn avenue. Some member of the family mentioned the name of Alexander Hamilton. Quickly the little girl piped up, "I don't like Hamilton!"

"Don't you?" asked her papa. "Why don't you like Alexander Hamilton?"

"Because he struck a corpse," was the reply.

"Who said he did?"

"Why, our history. In a footnote it said about him: 'He struck the corpse of public credit and it sprang upon its feet.'"
—Kansas City Times.

One Way to Dun

The poet Dryden was just a bit sarcastic when he wished to be, and that was usually when his publisher was trying to push him to the wall. When he had completed his translation of Virgil, after some deliberation he sent the manuscript to Jacob Tonson, a publisher, requiring for it a certain sum. Tonson, while wishing to secure the work, meanly attempted to play upon Dryden's necessities, which at times were great. He, therefore, replied that he could not afford to give the sum demanded.

Dryden in reply sent the following descriptive lines to Tonson:

"With leering look, bull-faced and freckled fair,
With two left legs and Judas-colored hair,
And frowzy pores that taint the ambient air."

When delivered to Tonson, he asked if Dryden had said anything more.

"Yes," answered the bearer, "he said, 'Tell the dog that he who wrote these lines can write more like them.'"

Jacob immediately sent the money.—Sunday Magazine.

Social Amenities

Charming Widow: "Good-afternoon, Mr. Merryweather. Let me give you a cup of tea."

Charming Guest: "Good-afternoon, and thanks awfully, Mrs. Fairaday. I see you not only reign but you pour."

The City Slave

"If you want to get fat, why don't you go to the country to live, where the food is more wholesome?" said the city physician.

"I tried that once."

"And didn't it work?"

"No. The food was all right, but I worried myself thin to think I wasn't back in the city."—Detroit Press Press.

Maintaining Dignity

One time Col. Bill Hackney, of Winfield, was indicted by the grand jury for betting on election along with several other men. Hackney stood in with the judge. The defendants all pleaded guilty. Before passing sentence on the bunch the judge took Hackney into a side room and asked:

"How much shall I fine you, Bill?"

"What are you going to soak the rest of the bunch for?" asked Hackney.

"Oh, I think I will give them $1 and costs," said the judge.

"Well, I don't want to be treated as a common criminal," said Hackney. "Just fine me $50 and costs."

And the judge took his seat on the bench and did so.—Kansas City Journal.

His Interest in the Rent

Timothy Woodruff was engaged in conversation with some friends in Kingston, N. Y., when one of the party referred to the fact that an extremely wealthy old man in the town had recently exhibited signs of incipient philanthropy.

"Why," said the friend, "do you know that yesterday he was taking around a petition for the purpose of raising funds to enable a poor woman to pay her rent?"

"Oh," said Woodruff, "I happen to know all about that. You see, Blank owns the house the poor woman lives in."

What He Used It For

Wine tasting was his business, and he was reputed to be one of the best who followed that somewhat peculiar means of making a livelihood, so when the bet had been made and the money posted, his "backers" were sure of winning. Incidentally they did.

The subject, blindfolded, was to taste, one after another, the contents of twenty-five wineglasses, and—if he would win the stakes—name correctly the liquor in each. From one to twenty-four he went down the line, never hesitating, and always right. At the last one he stopped. It was filled with water only.

He sipped it, turning it over and over with his tongue, asked for a second mouthful, considered it with a most perplexed expression, and then had an inspiration. "Of course," he exclaimed, "it's the stuff I clean my teeth with."—Harper's Weekly.

Furnished the Pretext

Chief Collins, of the Chicago police department, was talking to a reporter about his work.

"My work would be more difficult," he said, "in fact, it would be impossible, were it not that every man in the world is a policeman. Every man watches his brother man and knows that his brother man watches him in turn. Thus the work of we professional Lecocqs is kept down. Thus there was a suburban grocer who took his clerk to a saloon one day after closing time and purchased a good many glasses of beer. Then, after he began to feel talkative and trustful, the grocer said:

"Look here, John, I owe $3,000."

"Yes, sir," said the clerk, "I know it."

"I have $2,000 in the safe."

"Yes, sir."

"And the store is empty. The stock is completely run down. I think it is time to fail, don't you?"

"I do," said the clerk. "I certainly do."

"But I need a pretext. I'll tell you what to do, John. You think this matter over and let me know to-morrow morning any suggestions as to a pretext for failure that may come to you during the night."

"The clerk promised to do this, and the two men separated. The next morning on his desk the grocer found this note from John:

"I have taken the $2,000 and gone to South America. It is the best pretext you can give your creditors."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Repaid in Kind

"Here is a poem which you may publish in your paper," said a young man with eyes in a fine frenzy rolling, as he entered an editorial door. "I dashed it off rapidly in an idle moment, and you will find it in its rough state, as it were. You can make such corrections as you think necessary."

"Ah, much obliged," said the editor. "I will give you a check for it at once."

"You are very kind," said the contributor. "I shall be delighted."

"There you are," said the editor, handing him a check.

"Many thanks," exclaimed the young man; "I will bring you some other poems."

When he got to the door he suddenly paused; then he came back.

"Excuse me," he said, "but you forgot to fill up the check. You have not written the date, nor the amount, nor have you signed your name."

"Oh," said the editor, "that's all right. You see, I have given you a check in its rough state, as it were. You can make such corrections as you think necessary."—Chicago Tribune.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

DEATH OF GEORGE V. SLOAT

It is with regret that we note the death of Mr. George V. Sloat, which occurred at his home in Rutherford, N. J., on February 14, at the advanced age of 79.

Mr. Sloat had been in the employ of the Old Dominion Steamship Company from the time of its organization until his retirement in 1901, a period of 34 years, for the last thirty of which he was the superintending engineer of the company.

During his long term of service he enjoyed the respect and confidence of the management in a marked degree, not only because of his ability and experience as an official, but because of his sterling honesty and integrity of character; while his genial manner made him many friends among the numerous employees and others with whom he daily came in contact.

Apart from his connection with this line, Mr. Sloat was well known to the shipbuilders and owners on the Atlantic Coast and ranked very high as a marine engineer.

As a remark of respect to his memory the flags of the company both in the Main Line and Virginia Divisions were placed at half-mast, and many of its chief officials were present at the funeral services.

APPOINTMENTS

New Officials Elected

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Old Dominion Steamship Co., held at the company's main offices, New York city, February 13, the Board of Directors appointed Mr. Downer Adams treasurer and Mr. Edward E. Palen secretary and auditor of the company, effective February 14.
